

Hardboiled Egg Mystery Stumps 'Super Sleuths'

Eggs have been layed in chicken coops and on radio programs, but never in the history of embryology have the oval pellets been layed in bookstore, except at SC.

Miss Lilian Heron of the Student Union bookstore has uncovered a mystery that has baffled junior G-men for almost six months. For the disciples of One Long Pan and Sherlock Holmes, the Daily Trojan releases the following list of clues:

Regularly for almost six months, clerks dusting new displays in the bookstore have found a warm hardboiled egg nestling among the articles. Every time a new display appears, another egg is found, until the familiar cry of the store has become, "Here's another."

Miss Heron requests that the jokester leave some salt and mayonnaise with the egg on his next visit.
